Author's Identity Questioned

The ongoing debate about the true identity of the author of "Shakespeare's" plays will continue at Northeast through a live video-conference from noon to 3 p.m. Sept. 17 in Baldwin Auditorium. The Division of Language and Literature, the Division of Fine Arts, and the Pickler Memorial Library are co-sponsoring this event. It is free to students, faculty and staff.

"SHAKESPEARE: The Actor from Stratford?", a live panel discussion broadcast via satellite, will be hosted by William F. Buckley, Jr., editor of The National Review and host of the PBS series Firing Line. The panel will include "important, knowledgeable, well-known scholars from North America and Europe," said Heinz Wochlik, associate professor of English.

FIPSE Conference Planned

Northeast will hold its Second Annual Fund for the Improvement for Post Secondary Education (FIPSE) Advising Conference Sept. 17, 1992 in the SUB for faculty and staff who are involved in advising Northeast students.

The FIPSE Advising Project at Northeast is a federally funded program in its third year of operation. Its primary goals are to improve the quality of the University's system of academic advising, and to serve as a model program for other universities in the nation.

The conference will begin at 8:45 a.m. and conclude at 4:30 p.m. Featured speakers will include many of the University's seasoned advissors and counselors. Topics include: what students want from advising, advising for graduate school and learning styles. General information sessions involving basic advising skills and information resources will also be offered.

Attendees will choose from eight sessions scheduled for the all-day event. The conference will be chaired by Alanna Pruessner, Northeast FIPSE project director and associate vice president for academic affairs. Closing remarks will be given by special guest speaker, Samuel Pickering, beginning at 3:30 p.m.

For those wishing to attend the conference or for more information call 785-4109.

"My work and training lead me to the inescapable conclusion that he [William Shakespeare] wrote the plays," stated David Cicotello, assistant professor of English. Cicotello is looking forward to the debate, although he said "I am not willing to suspend my disbelief."

As evidence, Cicotello mentioned Shakespeare's documented membership of the court drama groups, Lord Chamberlain's Men and The King's Men, of both Elizabeth I and James I. Documents also show that Shakespeare was commissioned by the court to write plays.

"I believe Shakespeare became a very fine director/performer and became a great writer because of those skills," said Elizabeth Otten, associate professor of English.

On the other hand, Cicotello said, "Those who contend that Shakespeare is not the author of the plays reason that no lower to middle class citizen of a rural local (Stratford-on-Avon) background could possibly ascend to such a prominent place in Elizabethan society." In addition to this, Shakespeare's only education was approximately equal to a high school education.

There are at least two candidates considered as possible authors of the plays, including Sir Francis Bacon and the 17th Earl of Oxford, Edward de Vere. The current Earl of Oxford will be one of the members of the panel, defending de Vere as the author.

been a correspondent for the weekly newspaper Moscow News for the past six years.

Moscow News was founded in the 1930s by an American for English-speaking foreigners working in Russia. It is now published in 10 languages, and is one of the most popular newspapers in the country. Khanga works in the International Department of the paper and has written column on the problems of foreigners in the Soviet Union, on Soviets who want to emigrate, and other international topics.

In 1986, Khanga became the first Soviet journalist in an exchange program with the Christian Science Monitor. She also specializes in television journalism, having appeared on the popular Soviet talk show "View" as a commentator on U.S. issues. In the United States, she has been featured on ABC's "20/20," CNN's "Sonja Live," CBS's "Today Show" and others.

Khanga is presently a Warren Weaver Fellow with the Rockefeller Foundation in New York City. This fellowship experience acquaints individuals from diverse backgrounds with professional philanthropy and, in return, to provide the Foundation with fresh perspectives on its work.

Khanga, who is on her third trip to the United States, came this time with a mission to raise money to rebuild facilities that once housed the weekly Moscow News. The building was recently razed by an accidental fire.

The Moscow News is circulated in 140 countries, and is described by Khanga as "the most popular paper in the Soviet Union" because it quickly took advantage of the new policy of glasnost, or openness, and has become a forum for ideas that less than a decade ago could not have been expressed.

"We are very progressive. We were the strongest supporter of perestroika and glasnost," she said, adding that unlike the official dailies in the Soviet Union, Moscow News is not under government control.

"We bite," she said, simply.

which called it "a temple of satire." Chicagoans packed the place every night and the small club became a "must-see" stopover for professionals in the acting world.

The concept that is The Second City has always been translated by six or seven actors who liven an empty stage with topical comedy sketches. Using few props and costumes, punctuating scenes with original music, the ensemble creates a slice-of-life environment, lampooning our modern lives-political, social and cultural. The Second City develops all of its material in a performance situation, improvising on ideas suggested by the audience during improvisational sets held nightly after the regular show. Then, by refining, culling and amplifying the ideas during rehearsals, the finished pieces become the next revue. The Chicago theatre has averaged two or three reviews a year since its opening.
