A weekly newsletter for students, faculty and staff | Vol. 14 No. 17 | January 19, 2010

University Trend of Distinguished Recognition Continues

For the second time this month Truman has been acknowledged as one of the nation's best values in higher education.

The Princeton Review, teaming with USA TODAY, included Truman on its list, "The Princeton Review Best Value Colleges for 2010."

The list, which features 100 schools in all—50 public and 50 private colleges and universities—was released Jan. 12.

Kiplinger's Personal Finance magazine also named Truman one of the "Best Values in Public Colleges" in its February issue.

On USA TODAY's website, the editors at The Princeton Review commend Truman for being "thoroughly committed to providing a strong, broad-based, liberal education to its small undergraduate student body" and they note that as "one of the few publicly funded liberal arts schools in the nation, Truman attracts many of Missouri's top high school students."

The Princeton Review selected the institutions as its "Best Value" choices for 2010 based on its surveys of administrators and students at more than 650 public and private colleges and universities. The selection criteria covered more than 30 factors in three areas: academics, costs of attendance and financial aid, using the most recently reported data from each institution for its 2008-09 academic year.

"There are many first-rate institutions offering outstanding academics at a relatively low cost of attendance and/or generous financial aid," said Robert Franek, Princeton Review SVP/Publisher. "We're pleased to have again teamed up with USA TODAY to identify and commend the 100 colleges that do just that and do it best in the nation."

Visitors to The Princeton Review website (at <http://www.princetonreview.com/best-value-colleges.aspx>) and USA TODAY website (at <http://www.bestvaluecolleges.usatoday.com>) can access the complete lists of 50 public and 50 private "Best Value" colleges.

USA TODAY's site features a database that allows users to view in-depth details about the schools by clicking on an interactive map to explore criteria including cost of attendance and financial aid data, enrollment size, location and The Princeton Review's analysis of why each school was chosen as a "Best Value" college.

Kiplinger's ranked Truman 26th on its exclusive survey list of the 100 public four-year schools that "combine outstanding education with economic value." The University was also ranked as the 10th best educational value for out-of-state students. More information, as well as sortable rankings and other interactive features, are available online at <http://www.kiplinger.com/reports/best-college-values/>.

Egyptian Pottery Now Showing in University Art Gallery

Pieces of Egyptian history, some dating back approximately 6,000 years, are being brought to life this month at Truman through an exhibit in the University Art Gallery.

The exhibit, "Vessels from the Past: Ancient Egyptian Pottery on loan from the Royal Ontario Museum," consists of 28 objects. Free and open to the public, "Vessels from the Past" runs Jan. 19 through Feb. 19.

Many of the vessels, ranging from household objects to burial objects, were purchased or excavated in Egypt during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries and donated to the Royal Ontario

Museum in Toronto, Canada. Contents of the exhibit are on loan to the University.

Pottery is the most common type of object found on archaeological sites in Egypt, making it a tool for understanding the ancient society. It was inexpensive to make, usable for storage, long-distance trade, serving food and drink and it kept its form in the face of water and heat.

Pottery in this exhibit includes jars for beer or perfume, small dishes for offerings in tombs or temples, a vessel dated back from between 5000 to 3000 B.C. with inscriptions of the names of kings, and a "Spirit House" for the afterlife.

The exhibit features informational text outlining the manner in which the pottery was made, burial customs and details about specific vessels, as well as a timeline of Egyptian history.

Exhibit curator Sara Orel, professor of art, will conduct a Faculty Forum at 7 p.m. Jan. 26 in Magruder 2001.

A public reception will be held at 6 p.m. Feb. 16 in the University Art Gallery. The event includes appetizers and refreshments.

"Vessels from the Past" is sponsored by the Art Department, The Friends of the Gallery, The Missouri Arts Council and the Office of the Provost.

Field Experiences Shape Career Paths for HES Students

Field experiences through the Health and Exercise Sciences department allow students to apply career-oriented skills in an off-campus internship during the summer months.

Some students have interned in their home communities and throughout the U.S., while others have interned as far away as Africa, Ireland, Australia, Mexico and England.

Chris Lantz, HES department chair and one of the coordinators for HES field experiences, said many students completing internships abroad, and even locally, report satisfaction with the program.

"The students consistently evaluate the field experience as the top experiential opportunity they have in our department," Lantz said.

Two of the three programs within the HES department require practical fieldwork, and some students complete as many as 320 hours. Lantz said the requirements help students make decisions about what they want to do in their future careers.

"In many ways, those field experiences either reaffirm their interest in a particular area or shed light on the fact that this might not be the best fit for them professionally," Lantz said.

Students generally search for and select their own internships, but Lantz and four of his colleagues help find work sites, give approval and take care of problems and other issues.

Once students begin their experiences, Lantz and other faculty visit all students' work sites within a 200-mile radius. Lantz said field experiences, especially those abroad, help round out the entire Truman education.

"In order to consider oneself to be truly benefiting from a liberal arts and sciences education, you've got to immerse yourself in a foreign culture," he said.

A field experience through the HES Department last summer allowed Sara Wissmann, a senior health science major, to explore her passion for mission work when she traveled to Malawi, Africa to teach HIV education seminars to youth and adults.

"I've only been in America my whole life, and so I don't know what the rest of the world is like," Wissmann said. "There are so many others to consider and serve and help," she said, expressing her desire to acknowledge and help fill the needs of others throughout the world.

For five weeks, Wissmann lived in the New Jersey-sized country, working with HIV Hope, a program that works to encourage and support those afflicted with HIV.

The program is a facet of New Mission Systems International, an agency that coordinates Christian missions globally.

During her time in Africa, Wissmann and her companions primarily stayed in Malawi's modernized capitol city, Lilongwe. However, the group conducted most of their seminars in small villages.

Wissmann said her field experience is one she wouldn't trade. In fact, her life has been so shaped by her experience in Africa that she plans to affiliate with NMSI, the organization through which she worked last summer, to continue mission work after she graduates in May.

Wissmann is just one example of the nearly 90 students who participate each summer in the HES field experience program.

"It's definitely an invaluable experience," she said. "I wish everybody would go out and step out of our borders and see what life is like in other countries."

support a cause.

Right now LiFT is sponsoring two children. This month the organization is hoping to send $200 to the Red Cross for Haiti's recent earthquake disaster relief.

Donations are welcome, but those wanting to help can also buy a LiFT bracelet for $1. Half of this price goes directly to the cause while the other half goes to future fundraising.

LiFT members will be at a table in the Student Union Building from 10:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.
each school day Jan. 19-23.
LiFT is also looking for new members.
