Heating and Cooling Woes

Due to the recent sporadic weather changes, when exterior temperatures have been setting record highs and within two days drop below the freezing mark, unpleasant conditions have been occurring in some campus buildings. Unfortunately changing building conditions is not as easy as turning the dial on the thermostat. Many campus buildings are designed with "one-pipe systems" which means they can either supply heat and free (exterior) cooling or supply air conditioning, but not at the same time. Changing a one-pipe system building from one mode to the other requires a minimum of eight man hours.

Gene Schneider, director of physical plant, says "We see these types of conditions occurring most often during March 15-April 15 and Oct. 1-Nov. 1. During those times, the weather can be so erratic that a few days of uncomfortable temperatures are bound to occur. When we have record highs in the spring and record lows in the fall, we get calls about offices and classrooms being too hot or cold, and we do what we can, but it's impractical, if not impossible, to change one-pipe building systems, knowing that within days we will have to reverse the change."

During those fluctuating periods, systems on heat can do a certain amount of cooling. The air handlers bring in outside air to allow for cooling and have controls that vary the amount of outside air depending on the temperature both indoors and outdoors. The problems arise when outside temperatures are in the 70-80 degree range and the outside air is not cool enough to overcome building and people heat loads. In the fall, building heat can be increased during air conditioning by turning off the air handlers and allowing building and people heat loads to raise the temperatures. Schneider remarked, "There will always be problem spaces on campus, but our department's challenge is to work constantly to correct them." Currently work is slated in two buildings to improve systems and, over the next four to five years, others will be included.

"Whenever there is a problem, always call the office [Physical Plant at 785-4200] because we try to respond to all calls within one working day," said Schneider.

Schneider suggests to all faculty and staff to bring a fan during those unusual times. The increased air movement can help alleviate the warmer temperatures.

The entire University community extends deepest sympathies to Larry Stephens, assistant professor of history, and his family. Tally Jill Stephens, a junior English major at Northeast, was killed in an automobile accident April 10. We all feel a great loss.

Letter from Missourians for Higher Education

Thursday, March 14, Missouri higher education achieved a major victory in the State Senate with the passage of SB 353. Senator Jim Mathewson's Economic Survival Act of 1991 is historic legislation that will significantly increase funding for elementary, secondary and higher education.

The bill holds great promise for education in our state. But as our funding increases, educators will be asked to develop clearer focus, expand delivery and accountability and improve instructional quality. Senator Mathewson deserves a great deal of credit for ushering this remarkable legislation through the Senate by a margin of 24 to 10. Only 18 "yes" votes were needed to pass, which sends an undeniable message to the House of Representatives, the Governor and the people of our state. Education is the most pressing issue facing our state.

But there is much work left to do. We must now turn our energies to the Missouri House in order to get this initiative before the voters next November. Speaker Bob Griffin agreed to sponsor SB 353 in the House. The bill is assigned to the House Budget Committee for hearings April 10. House debate occurred April 15 and a vote should occur around April 22.

This campaign cannot succeed without your involvement. Here's how you can help. Personal letters to your representatives are imperative. Copies of SB 353 will be in the Advancement office at each university for your information and review. In your letters, tell your representatives about the crisis facing Missouri education. Tell them about your needs. Urge them to support this important initiative.

We are more than 20,000 strong, and it's time for our voices to be heard. Call or write your legislators today. Only by working together can we convince the House of the vital need for additional funding for Missouri education. By itself, this bill won't raise taxes one penny. It will only give voters an opportunity to decide the future economic viability of the state of Missouri.

Sincerely,
William J. Mann
MHE Chair

Toastmasters Group to Form

First of all, toastmasters have nothing to do with browning bread nor is it a social gathering who are skillful at raising glasses. Toastmasters International "offers the opportunity to learn effective communication through practical experience in an atmosphere of fellowship and understanding."

Lee Bates, associate professor of industrial science, is member of the local Toastmasters club. Unfortunately the group only has six or seven members and needs 20 to be chartered with Toastmasters International. Bates says many advantages exist with joining Toastmasters. Not only will you improve your speaking abilities, but your listening skills will expand. He said that students should join because it will help them make business contacts in a casual setting. According to Bates, more than 20 Toastmasters clubs exist in St. Louis. McDonnell Douglas has their own chapter, therefore a student from Northeast who wants to work for McDonnell Douglas could go the meetings and talk to a prospective employer on a non-pressure basis.

To become a certified member of Toastmasters International, an individual has to complete 10 speeches of varying lengths on varying subjects. The speeches are given at the meetings, with one person in the audience acting as evaluator and another serving as the "ah counter." The positions of evaluator and "ah counter" rotate among group members.

Faculty, students, staff and community members are encouraged to join Toastmasters International. For more information contact Bates at 785-4541.

We Got the Right One

SAB wants as many students as possible to appear in Northeast's entry in the Pepsi "You Got the Right One Baby" contest. They will be shooting the commercial throughout Dog Days with the last scene being shot April 21 at 1:15 p.m. in Stokes Stadium. Students should wear clothing with the Northeast name, student organizations or greek letters on them. The winner of the contest will appear on national television.

New Honor Society to Form at Northeast

The 251st chapter of Phi Kappa Phi national honor society will be installed at Northeast on May 15.

Phi Kappa Phi is an honor society open to all academic majors. Its purpose is the recognition and encouragement of superior scholarship in all academic disciplines.

The society was founded in 1897 at the University of Maine at Orono. There are chapters in 49 states, the District of Columbia, the Philippines and Puerto Rico. "It is an honor in a very large way that this University could get a chapter," said John Neitzke, associate professor of computer science.

In order to be considered for a chapter, the University was required to have faculty who are members of Phi Kappa Phi or who are members of a similar society such as Phi Beta Kappa. Approximately 14 faculty members are members of Phi Kappa Phi, including President Warren.

After the University petitioned for membership, a two-person team visited and evaluated the campus for two days. They interviewed various members of the faculty and evaluated the university according to certain criteria, including the number of faculty with doctorates and the size of the library.

Prospective members are considered on the basis of their class standing. Candidates must be in the upper 10 percent of the senior class and the upper five percent of the junior class. The total number of members in the chapter cannot exceed 10 percent of the candidates for graduation in that year.

The installation of the chapter and induction of the charter members will be held on May 15.

Center for Service-Learning Seeks Volunteers

The Center for Service-Learning encourages students and faculty to volunteer for community service. Groups and individuals are badly needed to assist local agencies with the delivery of ongoing services and special one-time projects.

CS-L has several unmet community and campus needs on file. The Adult Basic Education program needs volunteers to help non-reading adults learn to read. The Salvation Army can use either individuals or groups to help them ready merchandise for sale in the Thrift Store. The Red Cross needs people to sponsor and assist with blood drives. The Andair County Library needs volunteers to read to children and to help with general library tasks.

Student organizations may wish to consider community service projects to coincide with the annual Kirksville Spring Clean-Up scheduled for April 29-May 10. The University needs a group to help sort materials for recycling. The Kirksville Recycling Committee can use assistance in the community pick-up.

Public Service is an opportunity to become involved in the community, learn of problems facing communities and hardships experienced by different groups of people, and make a positive contribution toward total community betterment. A commitment of one to two hours a week by just a fourth of the university community would result in 1,500 to 3,000 hours of service per week. Imagine the impact of such an effort on easing personal distress of the less fortunate or on community betterment and environmental improvement. You may be the difference that enables a non-reading father to read stories to his children or get a better job. Your help might make the difference in the total amount of blood collected.

The community needs your help. Call the Center for Service-Learning at 785-4572 or stop by 120 Barnett Hall. We will refer you or your organization to an appropriate service agency.
