

"... grasp the opportunity when it arises."

For many of us, corporate mergers and acquisitions involving millions of dollars are items we skim over in the business section of the newspaper. For Northeast Alumnus Bud Hunter, they're all in a day's work.

In 1969, Hunter founded Ameco Inc., which became a multi-million-dollar-a-year producer of funeral supplies, healthcare and steel products. In 1985, 13 years after Hunter took his company public, Ameco's funeral supply division merged with Service Corporation International in Houston, one of the largest funeral suppliers in the country. The $131 million merger left Hunter SCI's second largest shareholder and vice chairman of the corporation. In a separate transaction, Hunter acquired the remaining Ameco divisions, healthcare and steel, to add to the growing list of private companies which comprise his private enterprise, Huntco Inc.

"I always had a philosophy that it would be nice to become financially independent. You find that once you achieve that, that's not really the reason you probably get into business," Hunter said.

B.D. Hunter was born on a farm in now non-existent Wilsontown, Mo., not far from Kirksville. Hunter earned his degree in physical education while holding down several jobs in Kirksville. Those jobs were supposed to be part time, but he worked an average of 48 hours per week.

"I felt that a college degree was important but I thought I'd learn more through the different businesses that I worked for," Hunter said.

He worked for a grocery store and a printing company that both went bankrupt, and pumped gas at a station run by a man who owned several failing businesses.

"It was interesting watching why (the businesses failed)," Hunter said. "I learned what not to do and what to do."

CEC Chapter Awarded for Excellence

The Council for Exceptional Children recently presented Northeast's Student Council for Exceptional Children, Chapter 259, with an Award for Excellence. The Council includes thousands of chapters from the United States and Canada and presented the international award to only 14 chapters this year. Northeast's Chapter 259 was one of only two student chapters to receive the award.

Chapter 259 has received the honor several times in the past. Criteria for the award include increasing membership, increasing public awareness of exceptional children, conducting several projects with the children and working with the government for the rights and increased awareness of exceptional children.

Chapter 259 coordinates the area's Special Olympics held at Northeast, setting up basketball and track and field events for this region. The chapter also holds Christmas dances and other social activities including movies and roller skating. The 23 active members also work often with the regional and local Transitional Care Center.

Senior Leah Raggo is the chapter's president.

"As president, I feel most people concentrate on the activities. Another important aspect is the professional aspect. We travel to state and national conventions where our members have access to professionals," Raggo said.

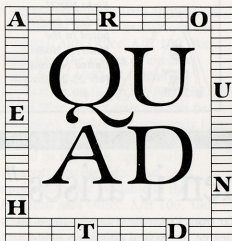

The chapter also won the State Award for Excellence last year, received a statewide Certificate of Recognition for increasing membership and several members have won the Dabney Award in years past. The Dabney Award is given by the State Federation Council for Exceptional Children for the outstanding student member in the state. Raggo was a finalist in this year's competition.

"What I've enjoyed most (about Northeast's chapter)," Raggo said, "is that we're not just limited to this campus. We meet people from other campuses from across the country. It helps us compare ourselves to what other chapters are doing."

Junior Dentse Rendina, next year's Student Senate president, participated in the Student Senate Candidate forum, April 7. Rendina won the election held April 8.

D.R. Shuck, race car illustrator, donated a series of six of his Indianapolis 500 Race Winner Illustration reproductions to Northeast's Art Gallery during his visit to the campus, April 1-2. These illustrations are the same series of prints owned by the Smithsonian Museum of Transportation and Technology in Washington, D.C. Three of the works have also won awards in the National Society of Illustrators Annual Competition in New York. ■

Delta Sigma Chapter Receives Award

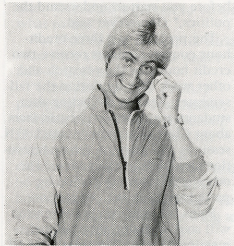

Northeast's Delta Zeta social sorority hosted the Annual State Day and Province XI Awards Banquet, April 4. Honored at the event was retiring Dean Ruth Towne, director of the chapter. Standing: National Enrichment Chairman Jan Snyder; Gilbert Koblenberg, professor of history and Delta Zeta Dad of 1964; Province Alumnae Director Eileen Hoffman; National Director Sandra Nesbitt; and Province Collegiate Director Dana McMillan. (Photo by Chad Schatz.)

For the second straight year, Northeast's Delta Sigma chapter of Delta Zeta was named Outstanding Chapter of Province XI. The Delta Sigma chapter hosted this year's State Day and the awards banquet held April 4. Besides Northeast, Province XI includes Delta Zeta chapters from Central Missouri State University, Northwest Missouri State University, University of Missouri-St. Louis, University of Missouri-Kansas City and

William Jewell College. Delta Sigma received certificates for the best enrichment program, the largest contributions to philanthropy projects, filling quota at rush, maintaining total membership, best rush display and most sisterly chapter. Senior Ellen Barry was named Miss Province XI. The chapter paid tribute to retiring professor and adviser of the chapter since 1952, Ruth Towne. ■

Comedy Comes to Campus

NMSU Students Attend St. Louis Summit

Eight NMSU students recently left college classrooms to become Chilean delegates at the 1987 Midwest Model United Nations, (MMUN), February 25-28, in St. Louis. Graduate student George White; seniors, David Boone, Louis Cohn, Doug Neff and Joanne McCabe; juniors, Thomas Dollens and Laura Obermeyer; and freshman Jim Harfst participated in the Midwest Model United Nations program.

The program exists in several regions of the country, from New York to Colorado. College students gain experience as delegates representing nations—setting policy, tackling world problems and interacting with other model delegates. The Midwest program begins in early summer and develops throughout the year until the end of April when the convention is held in St. Louis.

"The purpose of the Midwest Model United Nations is one of intense learning . . . and testing oneself to see how well you handle pressure," Neff said. Neff served as head delegate, which required him to lead the delegation throughout the program and to assign grades.

NMSU, which has previously represented Chad, Argentina and the Syrian Arab Republic, was assigned Chile. China, France, Great Britain, the USSR and the United States, which are all members of the Security Council, are the most heavily chosen nations.

Although NMSU did not represent one of the top five countries, the Chilean delegation was by no means weak.

"It's not so much your country, but your delegation, and what you can get done," Neff said.

"The Republic of Chile had a really good delegation. We were able to just about rule the world, which would never happen in real life—at least not in this day and age—but at the convention it was fun," Obermeyer said.

We were able to just about rule the world . . .

Once countries and schools were matched last summer, the group spent several months researching Chile.

"Most people have a general idea about the country and where they stand in their various issues in the different spheres of politics and world events, but it takes a lot of research to find out the specifics behind them, and that's why it's a year-long event. First, you need a basic knowledge of the country before you start to understand the politics," Obermeyer said.

The program is a three-credit-hour course. Students receive two credit hours for the research and other work they do during the fall semester. Besides collecting data, students are tested over basic facts about Chile, take part in mock U.N. sessions and learn to debate resolutions and defend their ideas. The other credit hour is earned by participating in the convention.

Plans for next year's convention will start with an informational meeting, 7 p.m., Thursday, in A/H 215, for anyone interested in participating or wanting to learn more about the program. The head delegate for the 1988 MMUN is Obermeyer.

Although the majority of students who have been involved in the program in the past have been political science majors, any interested student is encouraged to participate.

"I think for anybody who has an interest in what is going on in the world, how our world functions as an international unit and how the United Nations works, this is a wonderful opportunity for them to find that out," Obermeyer said. ■

Bud Hunter

But Hunter had one job in Kirksville with a business that didn't fail—J.C. Penney.

"I met the manager (while) pumping gas at the local station, working my way through school. He liked the way I cleaned the windshield, pumped the gas, checked the tires and all that, and he gave me a job with flexible hours while I finished college. He kind of took me under his wing to train me," Hunter said.

Hunter's managerial education was interrupted by the Korean War, but the parameters of his worldly education would expand when he left Kirksville for Scott Air Force Base in Belleville, Ill. Only 350-450 cadets were being accepted for training every three months, and with a backlog of 30,000 applicants at Scott AFB, Hunter's competition was keen. To become a cadet, applicants had to undergo a written exam and a personal interview.

"This particular colonel (who interviewed Hunter) said he was going to retire. He was studying the Penney Co., management; he was going to do some management consulting. So, I scored unusually high," Hunter said.

Hunter graduated in the class of 1951 and remained in the Air Force for slightly less than five years. His last tour of duty brought him to Springfield, Ill., which is still "home" to Hunter. There, he went to work for a small company which he later acquired. It was that company that Hunter built up into a management consulting organization for funeral homes throughout the United States and in many foreign countries. One of his many clients was R. L. Waltrip, owner of SCI. After helping Waltrip set up his retail funeral-supply business, Hunter founded his own company, Amedco, which took the wholesale market in funeral supplies.

Throughout the 17 years Hunter headed Amedco, the company evolved. Since Amedco manufactured metal caskets, Hunter formed a service center, a second business, through which he could purchase steel at a more competitive price. Hunter also formed a third business, focused on healthcare products needed for the growing nursing-home and homecare industry.

"Luck doesn't play near the role that some imagine. It's more being prepared to grasp the opportunity when it arises."

"I keep thinking that I'll take it easy one of these days, but one of these days never seems to arrive," he said. "It's (business) fun, and you don't get tired of having fun."

Hunter's miscellaneous endeavors include interests in a nursing home chain, Illinois Savings Bank in Peoria (of which he is chairman and 25 percent owner), radio stations, several aircraft, restaurants, commercial real estate and more than 7,000 acres of Missouri and Iowa farmland.

Success in business is what Bud Hunter has been about for years. But does it ever get easier?

"I still think that probably . . . success in any endeavor, whether it be in business or a profession, is represented by 90 percent perspiration and 10 percent inspiration. . . . And the ones that are willing to put in the extra hours and go the extra mile are the ones who will definitely be promoted or be more successful in whatever field they go into. That hasn't changed a bit over the years," Hunter said.

It seems an odd coincidence that Bud Hunter worked at the station where the Kirksville J.C. Penney manager bought his gas. And that the interviewing colonel at Scott AFB had been studying the Penney Co., management. And that his last tour of duty found him in Springfield, Ill., where he acquired his first company. But Hunter wouldn't call it luck. He would call it a continual string of seized opportunities.

NOTABLES

- Senior art majors in advertising design Dan Reiff and Melissa Schneekloth received Honorable Mention awards in the 1987 Missouri Governor's Employment of the Handicapped Poster Competition. The posters were put on public display as part of an exhibition in the Capitol Building in Jefferson City, Mo.
- Bob Jones, associate professor of art, presented four workshops on drawing, April 10, at the Deerwood Conference Art Show in Harmony, Iowa. The conference was attended by approximately 100 high school art students and their instructors.

- Roy Tanner, associate professor of Spanish, will have his review of Eugenio Chang-Rodriguez's book, Poetica e Ideologia en Jose Carlos Mariategui, included in the next issue of the journal Hispamerica. He is presently preparing a review of "En Torno al Cuento" by Gabriela Mora for the same journal.
- B. June Conner, Blanton/Nason Hall housekeeper was recently awarded a certificate of recognition for meritorious service to the students and Residence Life Program of NMSU. The award was presented by the Upper Midwest Region of the Association of College and University Housing Officers. Conner has worked with Residence Life for eight years.
- Jim Barnes, professor of English, will give a public reading of his recent poetry, April 29, at Central Methodist College in Fayette, Mo. He will also meet with a creative writing class to discuss contemporary American poetry.
- David Partenheimer, assistant professor of English, has had his article "Henry Adams and Goethe: Dichter und Denker" published in the latest issue of "American Transcendental Quarterly."
- Angie Woodruff, a senior special education and elementary education major, is the 1987 recipient of the Special Education Scholarship awarded by the national organization of Alpha Sigma Alpha sorority. In a notice of award, Elaine Rahaim Fuerst, national chairman of philanthropies, wrote: "As part of our national philanthropy, we award these scholarships to encourage worthy future leaders." The national organization awarded only one special education scholarship and one education scholarship this year. The special education scholarship carries a $1,500 stipend.
- Duane Ford, assistant professor of agronomy, recently had two papers published and has a book chapter in print. He co-authored "Chapter 14: Carbon Metabolism" with Richard Shibles of Iowa State University and Jacob Secor of Dow Chemical, for the revised edition of the American Society of Agronomy's monograph "Soybeans: Improvement, Production and Uses." This monograph is intended to be a near complete compilation of the existing body of knowledge about soybean. The book is due to be printed in early May.
