Truman Alumnus to Discuss Life After Contracting Meningitis

Jeffrey Damerall, a Truman alumnus who contracted meningitis while he was a student at Truman, will return to campus to share his story of the illness, the recovery process, overcoming obstacles and the importance of college students getting the vaccine. Damerall will be speaking at 7 p.m., Nov. 29, in Baldwin Auditorium. The presentation is titled "The Truth About Meningitis: My personal story of grief, growth and transformation."

Damerall also will speak to pre-law students at 3:30 p.m., Nov. 29, in Violette Hall 1000. The presentation is called "What Not to Consider in Deciding Whether to go to Law School: Dispelling some myths that may scare you away from success."

While Damerall was at Truman, he was a member of Phi Lambda Chi, majored in Spanish, lived in the Casa Hispanica wing his senior year and was the student adviser of the Casa Hispanica wing his final semester at Truman.

He went on to law school after graduation, receiving his Doctor of Juris Prudence degree from the University of Missouri-Columbia. During law school, he was a successful competitor in mock trial and moot court, winning the award for Outstanding Performance in Media Law his second year. He also interned at the St. Louis Public Defender's office last summer. Damerall is currently working as a clerk for a general practice law firm in St. Louis and plans to take the Bar Exam this February.

Additionally, he was married last June. He met his wife on a study abroad trip to Spain during the summer of 1999.

Photographer to Speak About War in Iraq

Lorna Tychostup, senior editor of Chronogram magazine and a freelance journalist and photographer, is coming to speak at 8 p.m., Nov. 18, in Violette Hall 1000.

The event is titled "Looking into the Eyes of the Enemy: The War in Iraq" and it is free to attend. Topics will be based on current events. Tychostup is a non-partisan speaker and her presentation will provide vivid insight on the war in Iraq. It will include photographs and stories that depict the lives of the Iraqi people.

In her words, "My primary goal is to communicate to the audience the day-to-day realities and complexities of life on the ground in Iraq."

Tychostup has visited Iraq three times and collectively spent more than 12 weeks there. Her work has appeared in Yes!, War Times, Covert Action Quarterly and Z Magazine. She also has been interviewed on NBC's "Nightly News with Tom Brokaw" and Fox's "Hannity and Colmes".

For more information about Tychostup and her work, visit her Web site at <http://www.lornatytychostup.com>.

The presentation is being sponsored by the Residential College Program and Residence Life. Contact Michael Houlahan, Grim Hall and apartments director, at 785.5343 with any questions.

The Truman Today will not be published next week due to the holiday.
Submissions for the Nov. 30 issue are due by Nov. 19.
Call 785.4243 or e-mail kbest@truman.edu for more information.

Student Union Building celebrates

Winter Around the World with Holiday Window Painting

Looking for a way to celebrate the end of the year?

Why not paint a window?

The Student Union is looking for student organizations, academic departments and administrative offices to help celebrate the diverse end-of-year celebrations.

The participants will paint a window in the Take Five Game Room on the lower level of the SUB. Painting supplies will be provided.

Painting can begin immediately by visiting the SUB main office across from Mainstreet Market. This event will culminate with a reception on Dec. 9.

Please contact the office at 785.4186 with any questions.

Faculty to Discuss the Production of "Greyhounds" at Faculty Forum

The second Truman Faculty Forum event presenting research and creative work by Truman faculty members will be at 7:30 p.m., Nov. 18, in the Ophelia Parrish Black Box Theatre. The event is open to the University and Kirksville communities.

In "Greyhounds: Playing is Process," Becky Becker, assistant professor of theatre; Daryl Fazio, assistant professor of art; and Joan Mather, associate professor of theatre; will discuss their production of the play

"Greyhounds." Fazio, who has an undergraduate degree in theatre as well as a Master of Fine Arts degree, wrote the play in which Mather directed Becker and Fazio. In addition to discussing the writing, production and performance of the play, Fazio and Becker will perform a scene.

A reception with refreshments will follow the Forum. The reception will be in the Ophelia Parrish Atrium outside the Courtyard Theatre.

Political Reporter to Speak About Campaign

Jo Mannies, a St. Louis Post-Dispatch political reporter, will talk about "Covering Election '04: The issues and the people" at 7 p.m., Nov. 30, in Baldwin Hall Little Theatre. Her visit is sponsored by Truman's Society of Professional Journalists chapter and the Division of Language and Literature.

"We're thrilled to have Mannies come to our campus," said junior Sam Murphey, president of SPJ. "Her many years as a political reporter at Missouri's largest newspaper will not only give us a thorough picture of state and national politics, but also an insider's view into the inner-workings of a major metropolitan newsroom."

Mannies has covered local, state and regional politics at the Post since 1976. Her reporting responsibilities this fall included covering the presidential contest in Missouri; the 3rd Congressional District contest; statewide advertising coverage; voting trends, rights, procedures; and campaign finance.

For more information, contact Karen Speckman at speckman@truman.edu.

New Mathematical Biology Program Taking Applications

Truman's Mathematical Biology Initiative is currently seeking talented, team-oriented and accomplished undergraduates to participate in the new NSF-funded, Research-focused Learning Communities in Mathematical Biology (RLC) Program. Participants will conduct interdisciplinary research at the intersection of the mathematical and biological sciences. This program is a one-of-a-kind opportunity for undergraduates with an interest in exploring or working in an area of growing scientific importance.

Participants will be part of an interdisciplinary team of two undergraduates and two faculty co-mentors (one from biology and mathematics/statistics/computer science). The undergraduate teams will create and carry out cutting-edge research on a project in one of six areas, and participants will receive a generous research stipend, room and board and funds to travel to a national professional conference to present their results.

Because the project topics available to interdisciplinary teams of undergraduates span the range of biological scales and organization, and because the mathematics involved span an equally broad range, this program has something to offer any student interested in applied mathematics, computer science or biology. Furthermore, participation in and results obtained in this interdisciplinary research program will be a great addition to a student's résumé.

For more information about the project topics available, go to <http://mathbio.truman.edu> and look for the news item titled "Taking Applications!" Questions about the program should be directed to Jason Miller, associate professor of mathematics, at millerj@truman.edu.

Notables

Mark Appold, associate professor of philosophy and religion, had a chapter titled "Peter in Profile: From Bethsaida to Rome" published in the third volume of "Bethsaida," edited by Rami Arav and Richard A. Freund.

Carl Baldwin, director of mail services, attended the Central Missouri Postal Customer Conference on Oct. 14-15, and earned several certificates. These certificates include "Mail Center Professional Certificate" and "Mail Center Safety & Security Certificate."

Jerrold Hirsch, professor of history, presented a paper titled "Sweet Singer of the Swamplands Here to Do a Few Tunes Between Homicides": Lead Belly, John Lomax and American Racial Narratives" at the Ninth Annual Music Masters' "Lead Belly, Shine a Light on Me," sponsored by the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame and Museum and Case Western University on Nov. 5, 2004, in Cleveland, Ohio.

Andrew Mun, associate professor of finance, had his paper accepted for publication in the Global Finance Journal, an academic journal in the field. The paper is titled "Contagion and Impulse Response of International Stock Markets." He had another paper titled "Exchange Rate Changes and Stock Market Volatility" published in the Proceedings of International Business and Economics Research Conference (October 2004), pp. 1-15.

Rusty Nelson, associate professor of art, and Wynne Wilbur, assistant professor of art, will have work showing from Nov. 18-Dec. 15, in the Mabee Gallery at Culver-Stockton College in Canton, Mo. The opening for the show will be from 7-8:30 p.m., Nov. 18. Gallery hours are 9 a.m.-3 p.m., Monday-Friday.

Antonio Scuderi, associate professor of Italian, had his article "Metatheatric Techniques and Inter-Character Dynamics in The Two-Headed Anamoly by Dario Fo" accepted for publication in New Theatre Quarterly (Cambridge UP).

M.A.E.-French candidates Brandi Moeller from Independence, Mo., and Amanda McGinley from St. Peters, Mo., co-presented with Timothy Farley, associate professor of French and M.A.E. specialty director for foreign languages, at the recent Foreign Language Association of Missouri Annual Conference at the Lodge of Four Seasons at the Lake of the Ozarks. More than 50 Missouri teachers attended their presentation titled "The Magic of Narratives: Teaching Through Storybooks."

Truman Speech and Debate Students Receive Accolades at Two Competitions

In two separate outings the weekend of Oct. 29-31, members of the Truman Forensic Union received accolades in speech and debate competition at the Colorado College (Colorado Springs, Colo.) and Longview Community College (Lee's Summit, Mo.). The events brought added challenges, however, as the Colorado College contingent briefly became refugees in a Limon, Colo., church when a blizzard closed significant portions of I-70 on the return trip. All participants from both trips returned to Kirksville safely.

Five Truman parliamentary debate teams challenged a field of 67 two-person teams representing 33 colleges and universities from as far east as Indiana and Kentucky and as far west as California. The team of Matthew Harms, senior economics major from Galesburg, Ill., and Ryan Walsh, senior philosophy and religion and communication double major from Cassville, Mo., reached the quarterfinal round of the tournament after successively defeating representatives of the United States Air Force Academy (Colorado Springs) and the University of Montana (Missoula) before losing the quarterfinal to representatives of the University of Puget Sound (Tacoma, Wash.). The team of Tyson Helder, senior communication and political science double major from Sioux Falls, S.D., and Sam Hodge, freshman political science and communication double major from Blue Springs, Mo., reached the double-octafinal round where they met a team from Lewis and Clark College (Portland, Ore.). Helder was ranked sixth best speaker overall in a field of 134 competitors.

In individual events competition, Elizabeth Hobbs, junior biology major from Newton, Kan., was the tournament champion in rhetorical criticism, while her teammate, Keith Schnakenberg, sophomore political science and communication double major from Buffalo, Mo., took fourth in the event. Hobbs was also fourth in persuasive speaking and a semifinalist in extemporaneous speaking.

Meanwhile, Truman students were in Lee's Summit, Mo. During the Longview College portion of the Central States Swing, Aaron Hammonds, freshman communication and philosophy and religion double major from Des Moines, Iowa, was the tournament champion in extemporaneous speaking, while teammate Heather Timmerman, freshman communication major from Hillsboro, Mo., captured second place in poetry interpretation and fifth place in dramatic interpretation. During the Northwest Missouri State University portion of the tournament, Todd Turner, freshman communication major from Chesterfield, Mo., and Erin Palmer, freshman political science and justice systems double major from Kansas City, Mo., took fifth in duo interpretation. Timmerman reprised her appearance in dramatic interpretation, this time with a third place finish.
