Goodbye long lines, hello on-line

by Cheryl Hash, student intern

Students who enroll this year for summer and fall classes will feel the effects of the computer age with on-line registration Feb. 22 to April 2.

This system is an answer to student as well as administrative input to improve the registration process, Lee Myers, registrar, said. "It's more equitable." It involves less work, more accuracy and faster results, she said.

"It was great," sophomore Mark Oxendale said of on-line registration. He was one of the 1,000 students who experimented with it last semester. "In a minute or two you had your classes."

Speed and convenience were two advantages Annette Parmentier, junior, saw in on-line when she registered last semester. "You knew then and there whether you were in the class or not," she said. "You didn't have to run around and get course cards."

Registration no longer involves the divisions as intensely during the actual enrollment as it did when using course cards. Myers said five operators will help students complete registration. She suggested that careful preparation in the following areas would trim each student's registration period.

First, pick up a Permit to Enroll for summer and/or fall courses in the division office of your major. On the permit, there is space provided for both selected classes and alternates to these.

Parmentier said her biggest recommendation to students would be to have more than one alternate schedule ready in case of course closure.

Oxendale affirmed this. Students should "make sure they have their alternate schedules ready so they can keep going and the people after them can go when they're supposed to," he said.

After deciding on a preferred and alternate schedule, a student's adviser needs to approve class choices and sign the permit before he can enroll. If a student wants to take an overload—more than 17 hours for the fall semester and more than six hours for a summer session—he should get approval from the Dean of Instruction, 204 Administration/Humanities Building.

The last big step before actually enrolling is paying any outstanding debts owed at the Business Office, 105 A/H. Unlike past registration practices, the computer will not accept enrollment attempts of those students who have delinquent balances.

Finally, enroll Feb. 22 to April 2 at the Registrar's Office, 104 A/H, according to the times listed in the fall and summer schedules. Students can enroll at or after their designated times, Myers said. As the registration period progresses, the more popular classes will close, she said, so it is advantageous for students to register at their appointed times. Lists will be posted regularly of classes which are open or closed.

When students leave the Registrar's Office, "they know what their classes are and what their fees are," Myers said. A printout is provided with each student's course listing and at the bottom, a statement of tuition owed.

Tuition payments must now be made in three installments as opposed to the four installments which students could make in the 1981-82 school year. Judy Mullins, controller, attributed this to "cash flow purposes." Every student's tuition should be paid by midterm with this new procedure.

Mullins recommended that students who pre-register pay an installment before leaving after the spring semester. If students later decide not to attend NMSU, they can get a refund if the Business Office is notified of this in writing before regular registration. The first installment for fall courses is due June 15 and summer sessions should be paid for by May 28.

Myers said if these deadlines are not met, a student will be disenrolled. Disenrollment entails losing a hold on those courses in which a student enrolled and leaving these open for other students who register. And, the disenrolled student will have to repeat the entire registration process.

Preparing now for enrollment is better than paying later in time or money. After all, it's still people who make computers work.
